

DRAGON MADNESS!

Last week, at Mundford Primary Academy, the whole school was shocked as there was a dragon's nest in the hall! Year Six investigated the site on Monday the 8th.

After referring to the Book of Dragons, the class's top dragon experts, Matti [REDACTED] (10), Oliver [REDACTED] (10), and Harry [REDACTED] (11), identified that the dragons that would hatch from the eggs were Grimlers, Marsh Tigers, a Sandrazor and a Polarserpent, and that the nest was clearly used by several mothers of different species to each other at the same time, which is very unusual. Another theory of theirs is that a Vampire Spydragon, a vicious dragon, is around Mundford.

"We're not sure why," says Oliver, "But I personally think that it is trying to hunt down the baby dragons inside the eggs when they hatch. But beware, as Spydragons can turn completely invisible apart from their eyes, and have poisonous teeth. If you want to find this elusive hunter, and possibly train it, look around treetops for a pair of glowing red eyes..."

All are advised to report any happenings of this nature to Oliver C, Matti or Harry H.

An interview with Mrs Eyres revealed how the dragons may have got in to the hall. "We were putting Christmas decorations away last week. In the morning, the nest was not there. But in the evening, when we had come back into the hall after putting the Christmas tree in the shed, the nest had appeared! It may have got in in that space of time, as we had left the outside doors open."

A professor of Dragonology and the author of the Complete Book of Dragons, Dr Ernest Drake, came to the school at the request of the headteacher, Mrs Galletly, and identified that the nest was abandoned and the mothers would not return.

The nest has since then been granted safe for inspection.

If anything is seen that is dragon-related, let Oliver, Harry & Matti know. The eggs, so far, are still a mystery...
